Worth a closer look: value or authenticate first

These items could be worth a lot more, or less, than a typical used price, depending on whether they're genuine and on the exact model, age and condition. We've given a rough guide from similar genuine items that have sold, so you know what's at stake. We strongly recommend a certified valuation, or authentication for designer goods, before you sell or accept an offer.

ITEM	ROUGH GUIDE IF GENUINE	RECOMMENDED NEXT STEP
Zip wallet (Louis Vuitton) Photo ref PC-02	$400 – $650	Designer resale platform with authentication Buyers pay more for designer pieces with proof they are genuine TIP Keep the box, receipt and dust bag, and have it authenticated before listing
Studded patent heels (Valentino Garavani) Photo ref PC-04	$200 – $400	Designer resale platform with authentication Authenticated listings sell faster and for more TIP Photograph the sole stamp and size, and keep the dust bag

A rough guide is not a valuation and assumes the item is genuine. Selling a designer item that turns out not to be genuine can lead to a refund claim or a selling-account ban. For jewellery, the National Council of Jewellery Valuers (ncjv.com.au) lists accredited valuers. For art, antiques and collectables, a specialist auction house can advise.

Before you post

- Read each listing against the item and add anything the photos didn't show, such as marks, missing parts or measurements. You're responsible for what you advertise.
- Take 3 to 5 fresh photos in daylight against a plain background.
- Start at the asking price and accept offers down to the lowest offer.
- Selling baby or children's goods (prams, strollers, cots, car seats, toys) or electrical items? Check productsafety.gov.au for recalls and safety rules first.

Selling safely

- For pick-ups, have someone with you, or meet in a public place in daylight.
- Take cash, or wait until a bank transfer shows in your account before handing over.
- Ignore buyers who send payment links or ask you to "upgrade" to receive PayID. It's a common scam.
- Share only what you need: a first name and a pick-up suburb are enough.
